

Timothy L.J. Ferris received the degrees B.E.Hons, University of Adelaide, Adelaide, South Australia in 1982, B.Th., Flinders University, Adelaide, SA in 1988, B.Litt.Hons., Deakin University, Geelong, Victoria in 1991, GradCertEd, Queensland University of Technology, Brisbane, Queensland in 2002, and PhD, University of South Australia, Adelaide, SA in 1997. His PhD was in the area of the theory of measurement. He worked as an Engineer for the Electricity Trust of South Australia and Morrison Court Pty Ltd, and as a Church Worker in the Presbyterian Church of Australia before commencing as a faculty member in engineering in University of South Australia, at Mawson Lakes, South Australia, in 1991. He is currently working at Cranfield University, at Shrivenham, UK. He has published more than 130 papers in journals and conferences and has made various other contributions to the scholarly literature. His current research interests relate to foundational issues in systems engineering, cross cultural issues in systems engineering, engineering education and research methods.