Abstract

This research purposes to present a thorough knowledge map of the intellectual structure of modern monetary theory based on the dataset collected from the Scopus database. A scientometric analysis was employed by analyzing 55 scientific articles published between 1990 and 2019, using the VOSViewer application, and analyzing the search results function on Scopus. The study discusses an overview and the prominence of articles, authors, organization, country, publication sources, collaborative researcher, and research themes. There were four category maps of collaborative researchers. Based on the identification of a collection of knowledge generated from twenty-nine-year publications, this research proposes a grouping of modern monetary theory research themes: Monetary system, Money, Economy, Government, and Sovereignty, as MMEGS themes.

Keywords

Economy, Monetary system, Research mapping, Research themes, Scientometric
